Foreword

Whoever said that history was dry? We live in an era of constant motion - moving upward and outward in a struggle to complete history - to make it full and satisfying. The degree of satisfaction depends upon the compelling goals an individual has set for himself and their hopeful eventual attainment. In this book - a "history" book - we have attempted to portray the ideals and goals of a group of individuals. How many more miles to go? To the graduating class of 1966 there are three years of miles to look back and reflect upon. Some of these miles were short and flew by. The weight of passing time was hardly felt. Others were lengthy miles with every inch of the burden felt. To the undergraduates there are miles ahead - some to fly on winged time, some to plod along heavily and seemingly endlessly. This is not the beginning of a history nor is it an end. It is a fraction of history - a part of which is yet to be seen. For each one of these graduates and undergraduates there are unseen miles - miles to be covered under the guise time. The promise of history to be revealed in time is expressed in the words of Robert Frost:

> The woods are lovely, dark and deep
> But I have promises to keep
> And miles to go before I sleep.

Dedication

We, the Senior Class of 1966, wish to express our gratitude to our parents—for being "You"—for caring—for understanding—for being there when we needed you—for being who you are—as you are.

OFF and ON

Remember leaving home for the first time,
the tears you shed
yet a happiness undefined.

Your care, understanding, joy and truth
came with you in your youth.

The picnics, the parties and parties and parties . . . . .

The yelling and laughter up and down the hall.

The tender voice of our house mothers' call,
as you go past in a laundry basket and into the wall.

Waking up in the morning and opening the door,
its green green from ceiling to floor.

The toils and troubles of the years gone,
your help to we who have taken them on.

Look down the hall at the exodus to begin,
as we look down the stairs at some new treasured friends.

Woody Woodpecker "a little song for the house doctors".
Sarah Gamp "a stately lady".
The little dancing pig from Walsingham "light steps and a light heart". "Curtis, LEAVE ME ALONE ----".
A flea "it sings, it dances, it jumps, it shouts, kind of makes the world go bout".
A dog catcher "with a hardy laugh we love so much".
A mouse "Hi! mousie mousie".
A northern soldier "hopping around Dixie".
A gypsy "that wet her pants when the mouse walked in".
A navy football player "Yea Marines".
A lilac bush "nice to have friends who like lavender".
A tube of doggy toothpaste "the dog with 40% fewer cavities".
A dog "that helped others have a good day. Thanks Patsy".
Another dog "that did ballet"?
Bloody Mary "is the girl we love".
A French poodle "who is a silent blast".
A Lamp "pull the chain and I blush".
A junk shop "anything from lollipops to Crowes".
A jewelry shop "that became a stamp collector".
A fire hydrant "a bright red bundle of flowing steam. You're so expressive Dolores".
A garbage collector "Oh Krause, that's ridiculous".
Walking death "bet you never wish it anymore".
Raggety Anne and Raggety Andy "must have been a cute pair".
Lady and the Tramp "let's go to St. Mary's".

The memories you have are all your own,
but the happiness they have brought is cherished by all you have known.

Now the youth has matured into something new,
something held within each of you.

Bless the tears that again you find.
As you leave home for the second time.
